Denver and DPS Respond to Student Art Displayed at Public Building

DENVER – The City and County of Denver and Denver Public Schools have received concerns from the community regarding public art work by Denver students displayed in a city building.

Through Denver Public Schools' outreach, it was determined that the student created the work as part of a school project, in which students were asked to select a master work of art, research it and re-contextualize it to reflect how the student sees the issue in contemporary times. The student chose Goya's The Third of May 1808 and later saw a similar statement in A Tale of Two Hoodies, created by Michael D'Antuono in 2014. After learning of the negative impact of her work, the student has asked that it be taken down.

Mayor Michael B. Hancock and Acting Superintendent Susana Cordova released the following statement:

“Denver and DPS are sensitive to all concerns in this situation. We absolutely value the voices of our young artists, which is why we display their work every year. We also greatly respect the impact this art has had on our officers who serve and protect Denver and others in the community. But there is an opportunity here, too, to listen and learn from each other and to encourage our students to engage in difficult conversations. That is exactly the intention of DPS and the city as we continue to address the community's concerns.”

“I'm greatly concerned about how this painting portrays the police. I look forward to having a conversation with the student and her parents,” said Denver Chief of Police Robert White.

Tomorrow, the student and her mother will meet with Mayor Michael Hancock, Chief of Police Robert White and Acting Superintendent Susana Cordova at her school, Kunsmiller Creative Arts Academy. This private meeting will be followed by a brief media availability at 11 a.m.

Hi Melissa and thanks Jenna! Please see information on the process below. Please let me know if you have additional questions.

About the Process for the Citywide Art Exhibition:

- Each year, following the citywide art exhibitions, city and school district staff debrief these signature celebrations. This year, part of our discussion will be focused on the selection process for pieces that are displayed in public buildings across the city. DPS and the City have partnered on these celebrations since 2009 and look forward to continued celebrations of student artistic expression in the years to come.
- More information about the process:
  - DPS has partnered with Denver Arts and Venues on the citywide arts exhibitions since 2009. Arts and Venues secures space for DPS to display student artwork. This particular exhibit containing 40 pieces of art went on display March 14.
  - DPS handles all aspects of the exhibit, from the submissions process to the approval of selected works to the physical hanging and removal of the exhibit pieces. At the high school level, a two-member jury of community arts representatives assists in the selection process. City officials do not review the pieces at any time prior to exhibit.
  - Depictions of weapons are generally prohibited. In this instance, since this was the only piece of art submitted by this teacher, and since the piece was relevant to current events and important topics for students and our society, DPS approved inclusion of this piece.

Last week, Denver and Denver Public Schools received concerns from the community regarding public art work by Denver students displayed in a city building. That is exactly the intention of DPS and the city as we continue to address the community's concerns.

That Friday, Mayor Hancock, Police Chief Robert White and acting Superintendent Susana Cordova met with the student at their school to discuss her work. While this was a teachable moment for all of us there is an opportunity here, too, to listen and learn from each other and to encourage our students to engage in difficult conversations. We must continue to celebrate the artistic expression of our young people while also being mindful of what is on display in our public spaces.

Skye, some officers observed this painting at the Webb building today and were very offended by it. You may know about it but I thought I'd give you a heads-up.

If we were to do Friday, here are the times the Mayor has available:

9:00 – 10:00
10:30 – 11:00
1:00 – 1:30pm

I am also looping in Sonny Jackson to help determine the Chief White's availability.

Hi all - The afternoon slot works better for us. However, I do want to flag that we may not have school tomorrow, given the weather, so I am wondering about pushing out until Friday, so we don't go through this again. Would that work for the mayor? We will not make a weather call until 6 p.m. tonight, at the earliest, or by 4 a.m. tomorrow, at the latest.

Hi Nancy,

Thank you again for all your help in coordination on this issue. Here are a few times that work for the Mayor to meet with the student tomorrow. Are you able to make one of these time slots work on your end? (We might not need the full 45 minutes but I'm just trying to block out as much time as possible to account for media avails, etc.

10:00am -10:45am

1:45pm - 2:30pm

Please let me know at your convenience. Thanks!

Good morning everyone! Please note DPS is closed today due to weather. We anticipate we will want to re-schedule the meeting with the mayor and our Kunsmiller student. If so, could you please let us know what time and day would work for Mayor Hancock? We will then start working on new arrangements. Thanks, Nancy

Denver and DPS Respond to Student Art Displayed at Public Building

DENVER – The City and County of Denver and Denver Public Schools have received concerns from the community regarding public art work by Denver students displayed in a city building.

Through Denver Public Schools' outreach, it was determined that the student created the work as part of a school project, in which students were asked to select a master work of art, research it and re-contextualize it to reflect how the student sees the issue in contemporary times. The student chose Goya's The Third of May 1808 and later saw a similar statement in A Tale of Two Hoodies, created by Michael D'Antuono in 2014. After learning of the negative impact of her work, the student has asked that it be taken down.

Mayor Michael B. Hancock and Acting Superintendent Susana Cordova released the following statement:

"Denver and DPS are sensitive to all concerns in this situation. We absolutely value the voices of our young artists, which is why we display their work every year. We also greatly respect the impact this art has had on our officers who serve and protect Denver and others in the community. But there is an opportunity here, too, to listen and learn from each other and to encourage our students to engage in difficult conversations. That is exactly the intention of DPS and the city as we continue to address the community's concerns."

Tomorrow, the student and her mother will meet with Mayor Michael Hancock, Chief of Police Robert White and Acting Superintendent Susana Cordova at her school, Kunsmitter Creative Arts Academy. This private meeting will be followed by a brief media availability at 11 a.m.
